WAR BRIDES

THE epidemic of military weddings calls for wedding gowns and yet more wedding gowns. This frock of white Georgette crepe, on account of its simplicity of line and trimming, is worthy of the star part in a war bride's trousseau. The himono waist is trimmed with a band of pearl and silver passementerie. "Family lace," or a modern substitute of soft shadow lace is used for vest, sleeves and shirt edge. A slight pannier drapery on the hips relieves the straight gathered shirt, which carries three bands of pearl and silver trimming. A girdle of silver cloth completes the frock, which is worn cover a princess slip of table satio. The veil with its more of manual blustomy. over a princess slip of white satin. The veil with its sprig of orange blossoms is draped "a la Red Cross." A good recommendation for such a wedding gown lies in the fact that it may be worn so many occasions after the wedding and will not look as "bridey" as white satin.
